Lake Forest College

A Vista on the Lake Bluff

Introductory

TO THOSE who love to study in a quiet place; to those who love to be surrounded by scenes of natural beauty; to those who love to dwell in an atmosphere of culture and in the midst of beautiful homes; to those who love to practice healthful sports free from all taint of the unwholesome; to those who aim to develop their intellectual, social and spiritual natures toward a large human usefulness — Lake Forest offers strong attractions. She offers opportunities for these things and many more. It is the purpose of these pages to furnish in concrete form such information as young people wish when thinking of a collegiate course of study. It is hoped that the glimpses of student life and of its surroundings as shown here, may shed some light upon the various phases of college conditions and activities and assist the prospective undergraduate in his selection of an Alma Mater.

THE NORTH CAMPUS

E n v i r o n m e n t

LAKE FOREST is situated twenty-eight miles north of Chicago on a morainal wooded ridge overlooking Lake Michigan. Its bold bluffs, rising eighty feet above the lake level, are broken here and there by deep ravines filled with a romantic tangle of trees, ferns and wild flowers. These ravines, wandering inland a mile or more, encircle the college campus on three sides, lending a rare beauty to the place.

Lake Forest is a little city of goodly homes nestling in the midst of fine oak woods—homes with ample grounds wherein the gardener's art supplements and adds the lighter touches to the grandeur of the primeval forest. A walk through the winding, well-paved streets gives successive vistas of shady lawns, of flower gardens, of bridges spanning deep ravines, and of the lake's ever-varying blue.

President Finley said: "Lake Forest is more of an earthly paradise than any other place I have ever seen." Those who gather as alumni every year from the ends of the earth do not speak lightly of the influences of the very place itself.

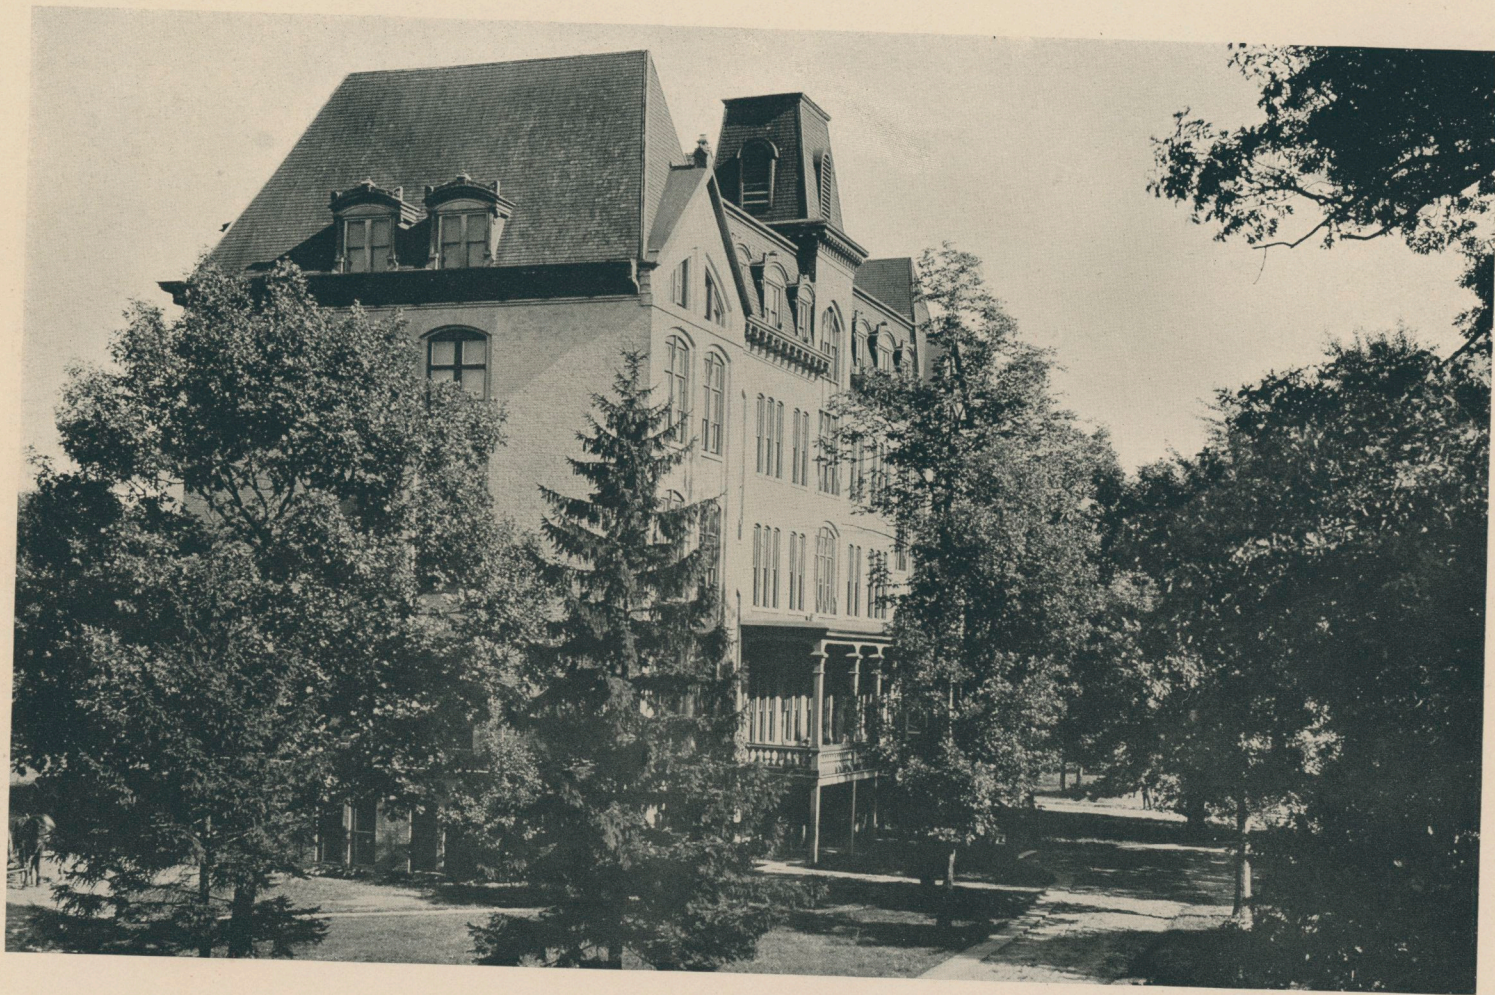

Yet this wealth of rural beauty, in the center of which the college reposes, and for securing which its site was carefully selected, is almost within view of the mighty streams of commerce. The sky-line of the lake is the pathway of passing ships, while a great railway affords rapid communication with the city of Chicago, many of whose leaders in commerce, industry, literature and art live in Lake Forest. The influences that go out from this place take hold upon the life of the world.

It is worth much to pass four years of the impressionable period of one's early life in such an environment.
